MOST IMPORTANT CONTRIBUTIONS

- Lozano, G. A. 1991. Optimal foraging theory: a possible role for parasites. Oikos 60: 391-395. This paper, along with my paper on self-medication (Lozano 1998 - 48 Citations), provided a general framework for the study of the effects of actual or perceived parasitism on foraging behaviour. It became the basis for much research on the subject (77 Citations).
- Lozano, G. A. 1994. Carotenoids, parasites, and sexual selection. Oikos 70: 309-311. This seminal paper brought forth one of the most exciting and productive areas of research in behavioural and evolutionary ecology in the past 20 years. Several of the most prominent researchers in the field have based their entire careers on this idea, which has been the basis for at least 2 dozen Ph.D. graduate theses (273 Citations).

Lozano, G. A., Perreault S. and Lemon, R. E. 1996. Age, arrival date, and reproductive success of male American redstarts, Setophaga ruticilla. Journal of Avian Biology 27: 164-170.

This paper analyzed the effects of various sequential events (arrival, mating, egg-laying, etc) on reproductive success, taking into account the effects of each event consecutively. The idea has been emulated repeatedly (89 Citations).

LaFleur, D. L., Lozano, G. A. and Sclafani, M. 1997. Female mate choice copying in guppies, Poecilia reticulata: a re-evaluation. Animal Behaviour 54: 579-586.

One of the problems with behavioural ecology is that experiments are seldom replicated. Here we attempted, unsuccessfully, to replicate what is still the most clear experimental evidence of female choice copying. Few researchers would have the audacity to replicate a study, and fewer still the ability get their results published, particularly when they differ from those of the first report. I must give proper credit to my undergraduate student, Daniel Lafleur, who spearheaded the study and ensured a high-quality result. (38 Citations).

This was one of the first papers documenting senescence of immune function in a wild bird, and the first to address differences in immunocompetence between the sexes by comparing both the mean response and the difference in the variance of the response (36 Citations).

Of course, in a couple of years this list might have to be modified to include some of my last few papers. Time will tell.
